Play Mart's Recycled Bell Ringer Racer Climber is an exciting commercial-grade climber that will inject some thrilling competition into your park or schoolyard. Some kids will be naturally looking for objects on the playground to scale in order to put their muscular strength to the test. Just climbing up either of the Racer's two metal poles should then be engaging enough. The fun twist that separates this climber from the rest comes from the small bell installed in the middle of the vertical framework overhead. Now each pole becomes a separate path to success in a race between two children to see who can reach the top first and declare victory to the whole playground by way of a loud series of rings. Rather than using traditional wood, this installation's framework is built out of Recycled Structural Plastic. This material has far fewer maintenance needs than wood and presents a greener purchase decision that helps keep trash from ending up in a landfill.
